What Becomes by AL Kennedy: review - Telegraph

Kennedy begins not at the beginning in a traditional sense, as another, less confident, writer might. For example, the first story, What Becomes, has the main character in a cinema, alone, waiting for the film to start. it is Kennedy's choice of words which immediately creates an atmosphere. The opening paragraph talks of the empty cinema screen as "a kind of hanging absence" and on the second page, the small room "put Frank in mind of a bus, some kind of wide slow vehicle, sliding off ...
