When a trailer is designed to carry 3,000 pounds, it must have a working braking system. The neck of a trailer is two pieces. The front side with the hitch is separate and slides on the ledge to the back half of the neck. A master cylinder for the trailer brake is mounted on the back half of the neck and has a rod extending to the front half.

This happens because the anode rod used in the heater starts to corrode and produces hydrogen sulfide which smells like rotten egg. To fix this headache, follow these steps below: Replace the corroded rod. Using aluminium rod can help avoid corrosion and thus the rotten-egg-smell problem. You can try to make sure that the water is softer.
